Description :

Presentation de l'auteurDescription Tony Hurley may look like Michael Caine on the cover of his book but his life has turned out very differently. Written with honesty, humanity and integrity this is a book about one man's struggle with manic depression. At one time Tony had five psychiatrists and he still managed to pass his Open University Degree! Tony's honest and genuine autobiography on living with manic depression is remarkable for its positive outlook. Tony has written this book to help others with the same affliction. About the Author Born on 6th May 1935, in Cork, Tony now lives in London. An Open University graduate with a BA in Management and Technology, Tony has lead a lifelong battle against manic depression. At one time he had five counsellors looking after him, despite all this Tony has always managed to maintain a positive outlook in life and his relationships. Now retired, Tony is a committed mental health activist. He was instrumental in the forming of the manic depression fellowship when it was in its infancy.
